Salta has been the Workers' Party stronghold since 2000. Trotskyism won a seat for the Lower House and reached 28.39 percent in Salta city, becoming the most-voted front.

Santiago del Estero's Kirchnerite ally Gerardo Zamora received the strongest support nationwide: 76.44 percent. Zamora's front surpassed 96 percent in some districts, such as Silipica, Jiménez and San Martín.

The Radical Party (UCR) had been sent off of the Tucumán's political stage but it recovered and won two seats out of possible four, and took the Capital, where Fuerza Republicana, founded by the genocide perpetrator Antonio Domingo Bussi, received almost 10 percent.

Bittersweet victory for Córdoba's José Manuel de la Sota. The province appears divided in four main political fronts, a trend that is more evident in Córdoba city: Dissident Peronism (15 percent), UCR (20.1), Kirchnerite FpV (14.2) and PRO (16.6).

Vaca Muerta, a huge shale oil and gas formation, is in Neuquén's Añelo department. Anti-Kirchnerite and Hugo Moyano ally Guillermo Pereyra won by a wide margin there with more than 55 percent while the Kirchnerite Senate candidate won about 20 percent of the vote.

Binner's victory was clear in Santa Fe, but comedian Del Sel won in the northern district of 9 de julio, where there was also a tight race with the FpV. The three parties earned some 30 percent of the vote each. The north of Santa Fe suffers a socioeconomic reality more similar to the northern provinces.

Two results to explain quasi-UCR Margarita Stolbizer's weak performance in BA province: 33.10 percent in the agrarian Daireaux, located in the centre of the province, and 6 percent in the most populous district, La Matanza.

Cristina Kirchner's "place in the world," Calafate, is located in Lago Argentino district. With 52.82 percent, Kirchnerism doubled its provincial support there.
